Ann Burr is the President of Northeast Region for Frontier Communications. Ann had many opportunities to say no and turn away from her challenges. Her commitment to saying yeas and putting her life on the line with no plan B created many turning points in her life. As a result, she had been able to continuously build on her experiences to balance family and business.

Frontier communications employs 15,000 employees in 27 states on a pro forma basis as of December 31, 2009. They offer the nation's largest communications services provider focused on rural areas and small and medium-sized towns and cities including access services, local services, long distance services, data and internet services, directory services, television services, and wireless services. The headquarters is located in Stamford, Connecticut, USA.

The defining moment that shaped Ann Burr's life was when Time Warner Cable offered Burr a position as a division president in San Diego. She would be the first woman to serve as a division president in Time Warner Cable history, if she moves her family to San Diego and takes the job. "I've been very fortunate in being offered new opportunities and new roles, but in taking those roles and opportunities I have been very fortunate to grow professionally and personally" Ann was fortunate to be able to join several types of communication companies to lead him to frontier communication as the President of Northeast Region for Frontier Communications.
